November 21 - 25, 2020 - Valencia, Spain

The aim of this special track is to invite researchers to reflect on the new challenges in computer human interactions in the context of computer supported cooperative work.

The immersion of technology in the last decades in people's lives and workplaces has changed the dynamics of how we live, how we interact, how we work and how cooperate with each other. New ways of interacting, cooperating, and working have emerged, such as customer services have changed radically lately, while adopting an extensive use of chatbots, or robots intended to do the work previously done by humans. However, the previous types of human work have not vanished, but changed into forms of facilitation, maintenance, or supportive work for the technology. Moreover, the changes in the society at large, the empowerment of marginalized groups has been calling for new ways of cooperation, expanding the cooperative space and the development of new tools to support this cooperation in a way that enhances new relationships, responsibilities, tasks, and the division of labor between the actors.

We invite the contributors to make use of Computer Supported Cooperative Work topics and concepts with a human computer interaction perspective.

Topics include, but not limited to:

- CSCW in new work contexts
- Cooperation with or through things (e.g., chatbots, robots, VR)
- Cooperative work in the home
- Cooperative work in organizational settings (e.g., hospitals, higher education institutions, companies)
- Exploring socio-materiality in CSCW

- Exploring PD in CSCW
- Awareness in cooperative systems
- Physical and/or virtual artifacts as boundary objects
- New applications in CSCW
- (De-)fragmentation of awareness in cooperative settings
- Coordination mechanisms
- Solutions that support mobility, nomadicity and visibility in cooperative settings
- Use of ethnographic methods in cooperative settings
- Concept of (re-)work
- Shared work between humans and agents (e.g., robots)
