April 24 - 28, 2023 - Venice, Italy

The aim of this special track is to invite researchers to present and theorize on design practices for co-creation and learning in the context of the digital society. The immersion of technology in people's lives and workplaces has changed the dynamics of how we live, how we interact, how we work, how we learn and how we cooperate with each other. This ongoing digitalization of our society creates new and immensely complex environments raising issues concerning the possibility to understand and create conditions for meaningful interactions. Several researchers take a critical stance against unreflective acceptance of this digital transformation and instead acknowledge people's life as a core focus of inquiry. There is a need to develop new methods, tools, and techniques to increase participation in both professional and end-user design practices to put emphasis on human values. In the special track, we are looking for research that aims to make technology design accessible to everyone, by empowering people with means to actively engage in and contribute to co-creative practices in diverse domains (i.e., health, education, engineering, or media), opening for democratic design practices. We invite the contributors to shed light on salient topics and concepts within a human computer interaction perspective.

Topics include, but not limited to:

- Co-design or Co-creation practices in the Digital Society
- Exploration of design-in-use or end-user-design
- Participatory Design in Learning Contexts
- Democratizing Design Practices
- Design for cooperation and learning
