

Short Biography

KAMBAYASHI, Yasushi

Dr. Yasushi Kambayashi is a professor in the Department of Informatics and Data Science from Sanyo-Onoda City University. He worked at the Nippon Institute of Technology and Mitsubishi Research Institute as an associate professor and staff researcher, respectively, before joining the Institute. His research interests include theory of computation, theory and practice of programming languages, and mathematical political science. He received his PhD in Engineering from the University of Toledo, his MS in Computer Science from the University of Washington, and his BA in Law from Keio University. He has been conducting several government granted projects on multi-agent and multi-robot systems. He is currently engaging evacuation support systems based on multi-agents and cooperative multiple UAVs. He has published seven books (co-authored), and thirteen journal papers on these topics. He worked for the Japan Information-Technology Engineers Examination as a committee member. He is a Fellow of IARIA, a committee member of INSTICC. He is a member of ACM, IEEE Computer Society, Tau Beta Pi, IPSJ, IEICE System Society, and Japan Flutist Association.